The airport is the latest to be outfitted with the Transportation Security Administration's PreCheck process, which allows certain frequent flyers and low-risk travels to skip the most time consuming security screening measures.

Those in the PreCheck line can also leave their computers and approved liquids in their bags.

“Just this year I’ve traveled 100,000 miles already,” said Derrow, a project manager for CVS Pharmacy who was in Des Moines to oversee the opening of a new store. “It saves me quite a bit of time. You just go right on through.”

Des Moines is the first city in Iowa to have PreCheck. The TSA has installed PreCheck at 97 airports and plans to expand it to six more by the end of the year, though none in Iowa.

Some frequent flyers, members of trusted traveler programs and military personnel will be able to enroll to use PreCheck each time they fly.

Other travelers may be selected by the TSA to use PreCheck for certain flights. They will see a PreCheck logo on their boarding pass.

The goal is to usher a quarter of all travelers through the expedited screening process, said Jay Brainard, the TSA’s federal security director for Iowa.

“This program is another example of how the TSA continues to move away from a one-size-fits-all approach to transportation security,” he said.

Brainard said the TSA does not have estimates on how much time PreCheck saves the average traveler.
